American Water Resources Association (AWRA) Newsletter

Greetings!
Happy 2013!

Wow, resolution time is here again! Have you made your water resolutions for the year? Use less? Conserve more? Educate yourself on integrated water resources management? Collaborate with other water resource management professionals on water resources management, education or research?

For the first two, we recommend a visit to the Water Use it Wisely website. Their list of 100+ Ways to Conserve will give you some great ideas and resources.

Until next time,
Christine McCrehin

AWRA President Speaks at Renewable Natural Resources Foundation Congress

Washington, DC—AWRA President and Executive Director of the Delaware River Basin Carol Collier recently addressed the Renewable Natural Resources Foundation \(RNRF\) 2012 Congress. (At the time of the Congress, Collier was AWRA president-elect.)

Via the topic of "How the Delaware River Basin Commission has been coping in these financially challenging times," Collier touched on her organization's experiences with many of the challenges faced by her fellow speakers and attendees. Held December 13-14, 2012, speakers were invited to address questions like "What programs, services, ecological assets and environmental infrastructure are most essential?" AWRA Technical Director Richard Engberg and JAWRA Editor Kenneth Lanfar also attended the meeting.

RNRF is a consortium of organizations concerned with renewable resources. AWRA is a member organization. Richard Engberg is a member of the RNRF Executive Board, Vice Chair of RNRF and chaired most of the 2012 Congress.
